

Miami Marine Stadium. A concrete ribcage rotting in the salt spray. It's the perfect place to die, and a hell of a place to park.

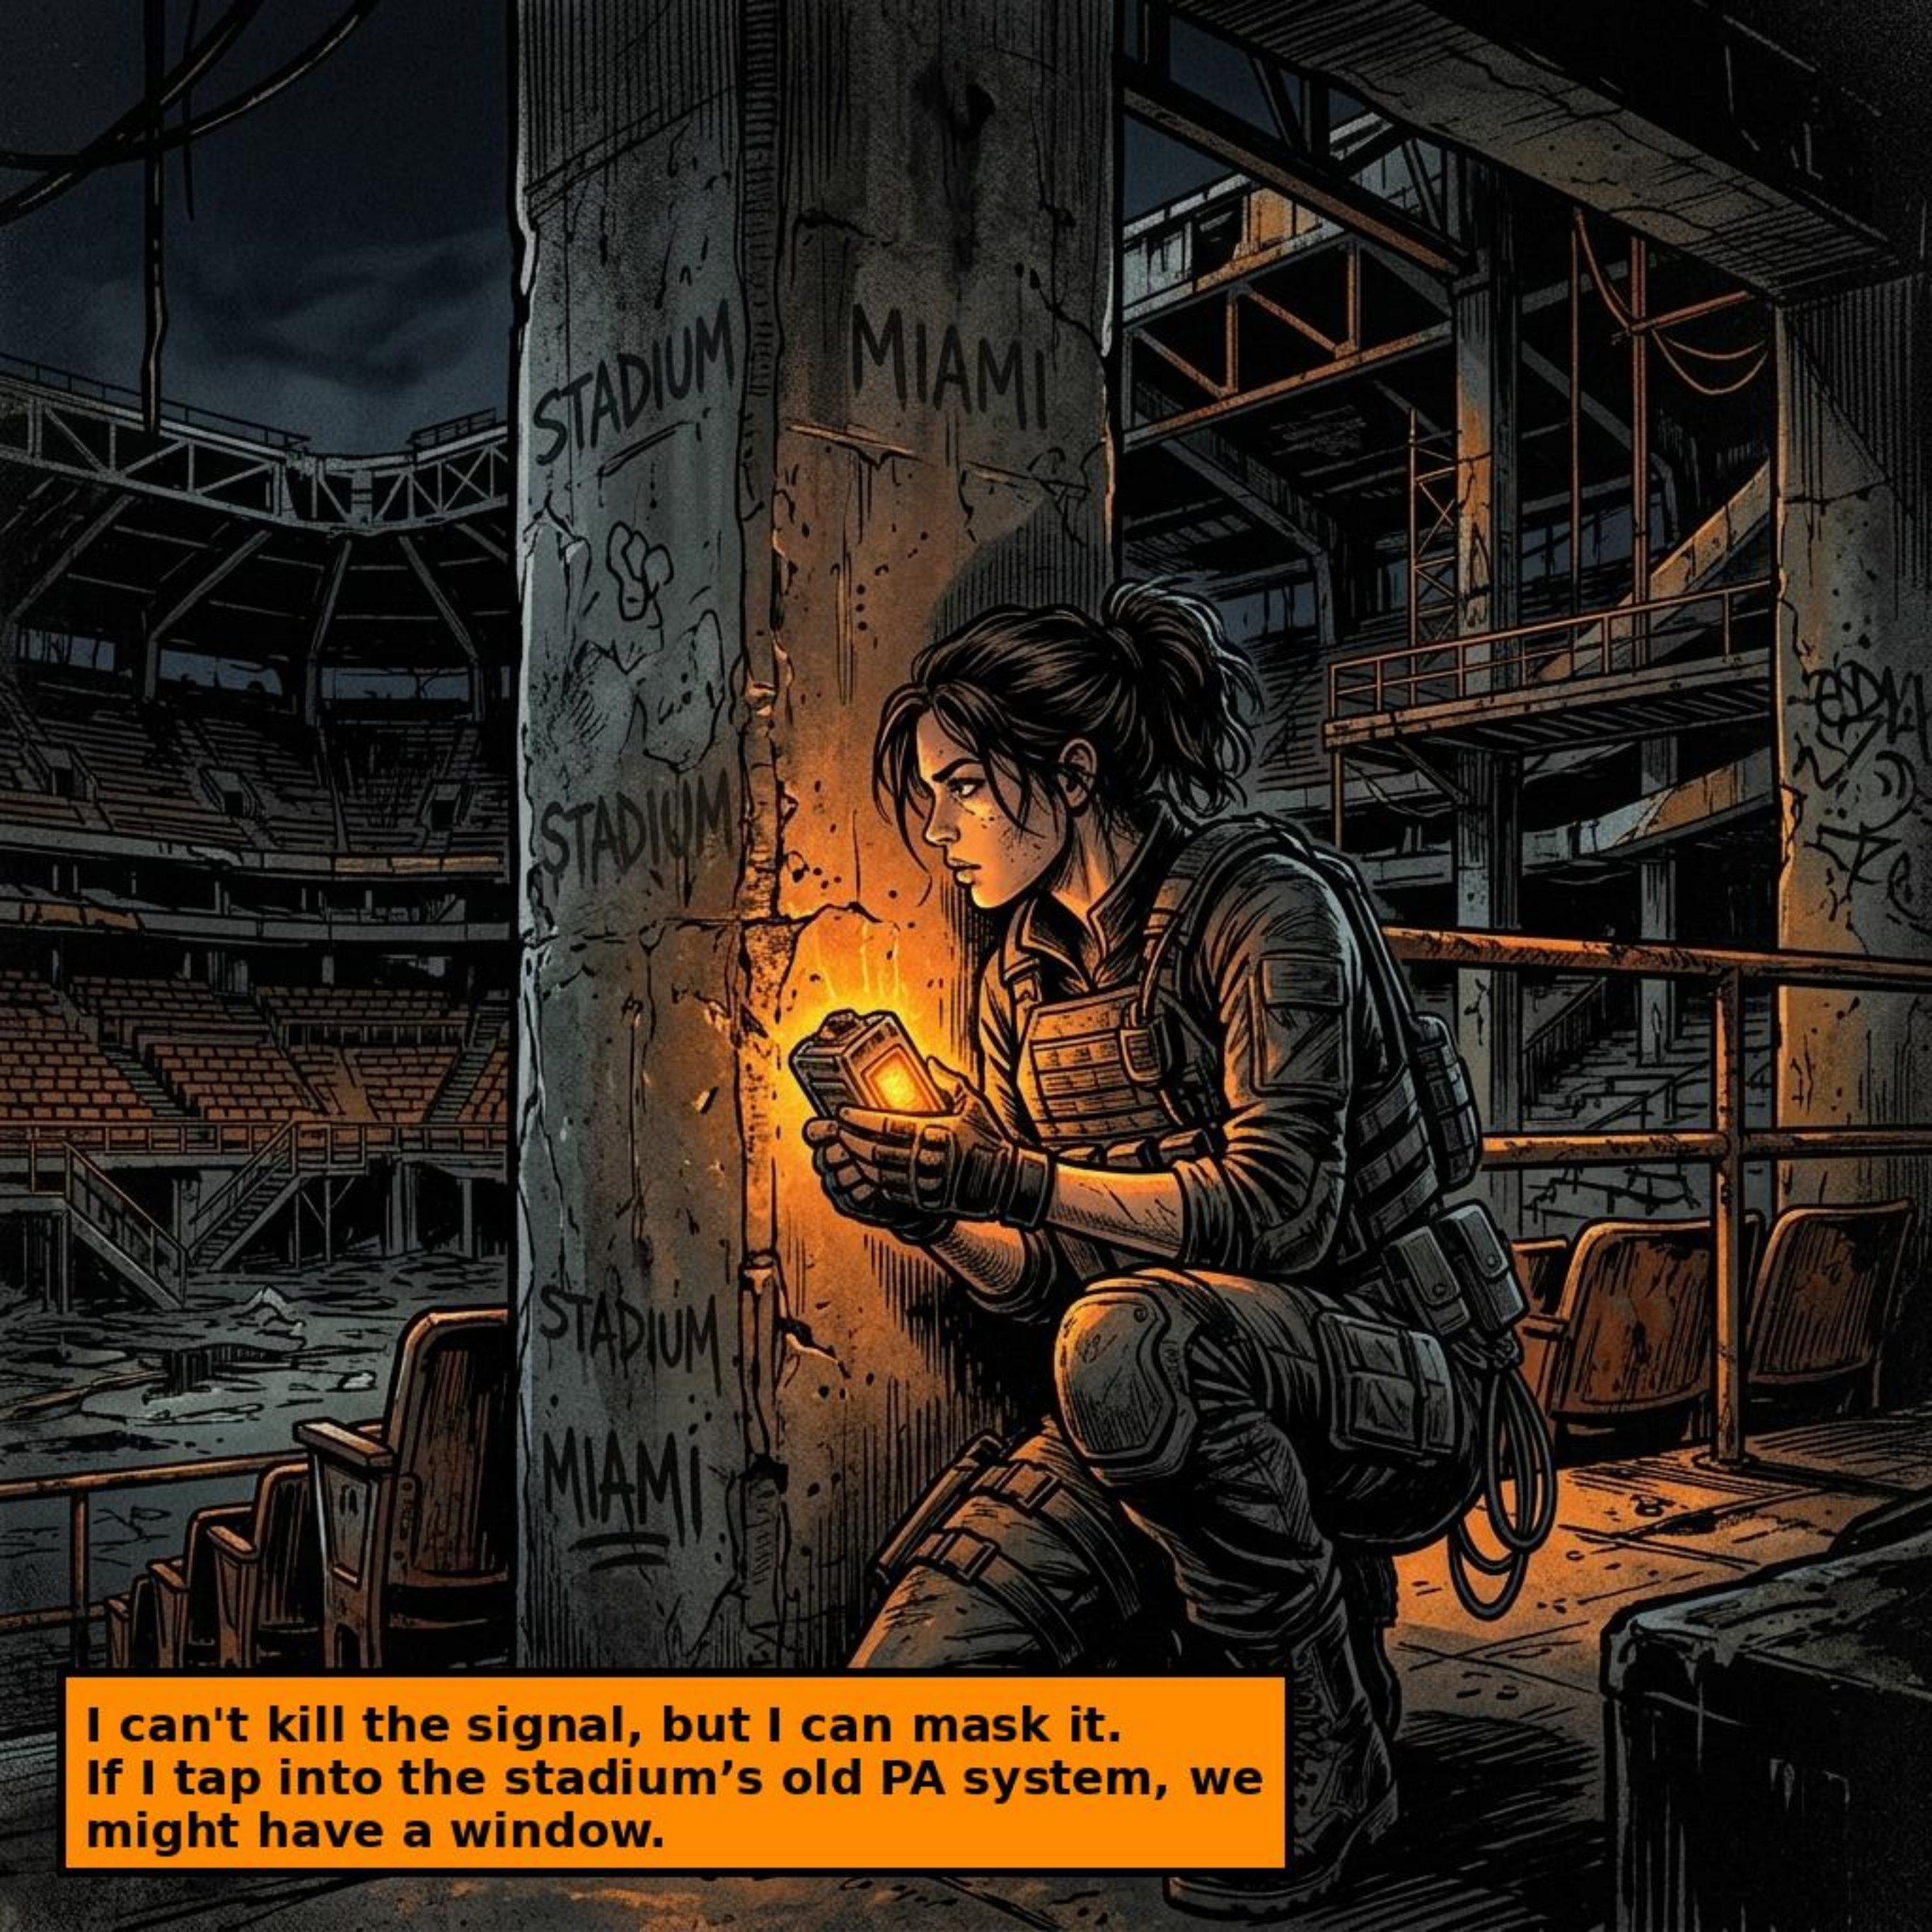

Three blocks of high-pitched, metallic screaming. The transmission was a dying ghost.

No shifts left. Just grinding gears and shattered synchronizers. The LeMans is a corpse.

They didn't have to guess where we were. The V-Sentry module is a homing beacon.

I can't kill the signal, but I can mask it.
If I tap into the stadium's old PA system, we might have a window.

DIRECTOR VANCE AT MIAMI MARINE STADIUM.

Cutter. You're out of road. Surrender the Module and maybe I'll let the sweepers leave your organs in the chassis.

RAIN

'SPLASH!'

THUNDER

I pull the Mossberg from the trunk. The steel is cold and honest. Vance! You want the module? Audit it yourself!

The first Vanguard Bronco charges. It ignores the stairs, bouncing its heavy shocks over the concrete ledges.

RAWR!

VROOOM!

MIAMI MARINE STADIUM - THE JUMP!

The storm d rain. It brou

Three rounds of buckshot into the radiator.
Steam and sparks erupt like a geyser.

BLAM!

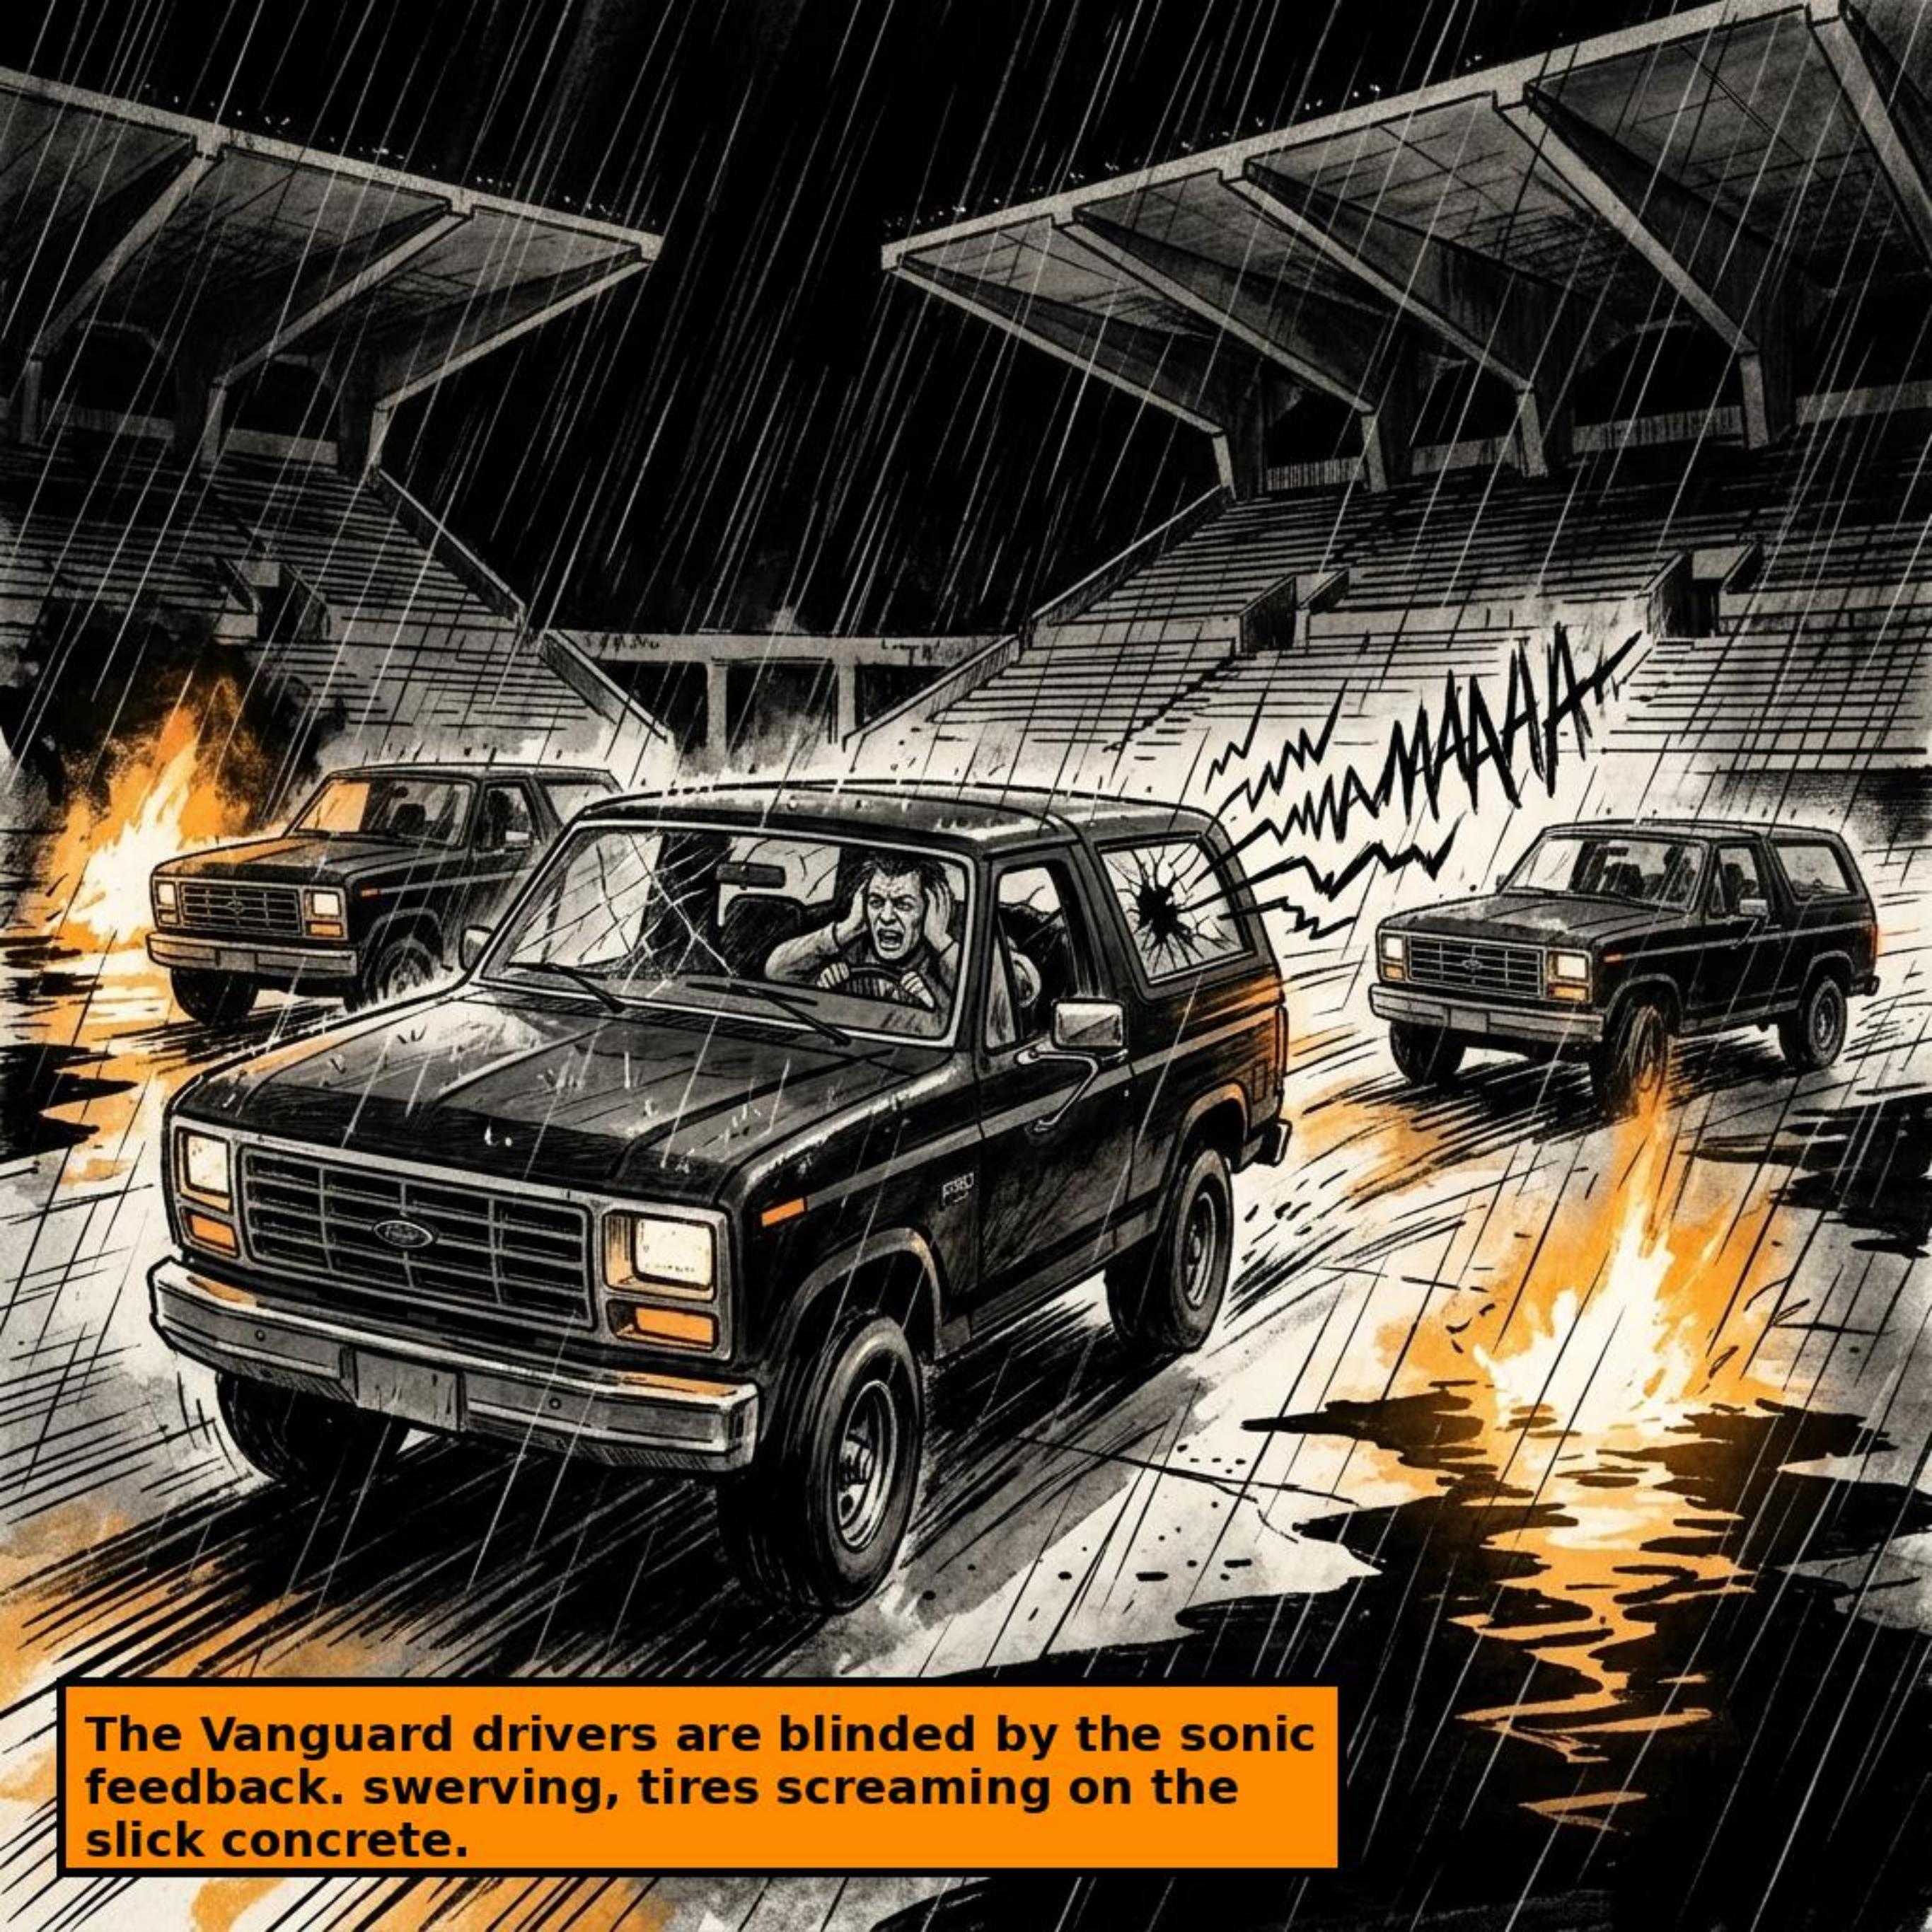

A hot, searing streak of pain. The 'Uninstaller' arc isn't a game anymore. I'm bleeding for the first time in years.

Frequency synced! Axel, cover your ears! I'm feeding the V-Sentry pulse directly into the stadium's horn-speakers!

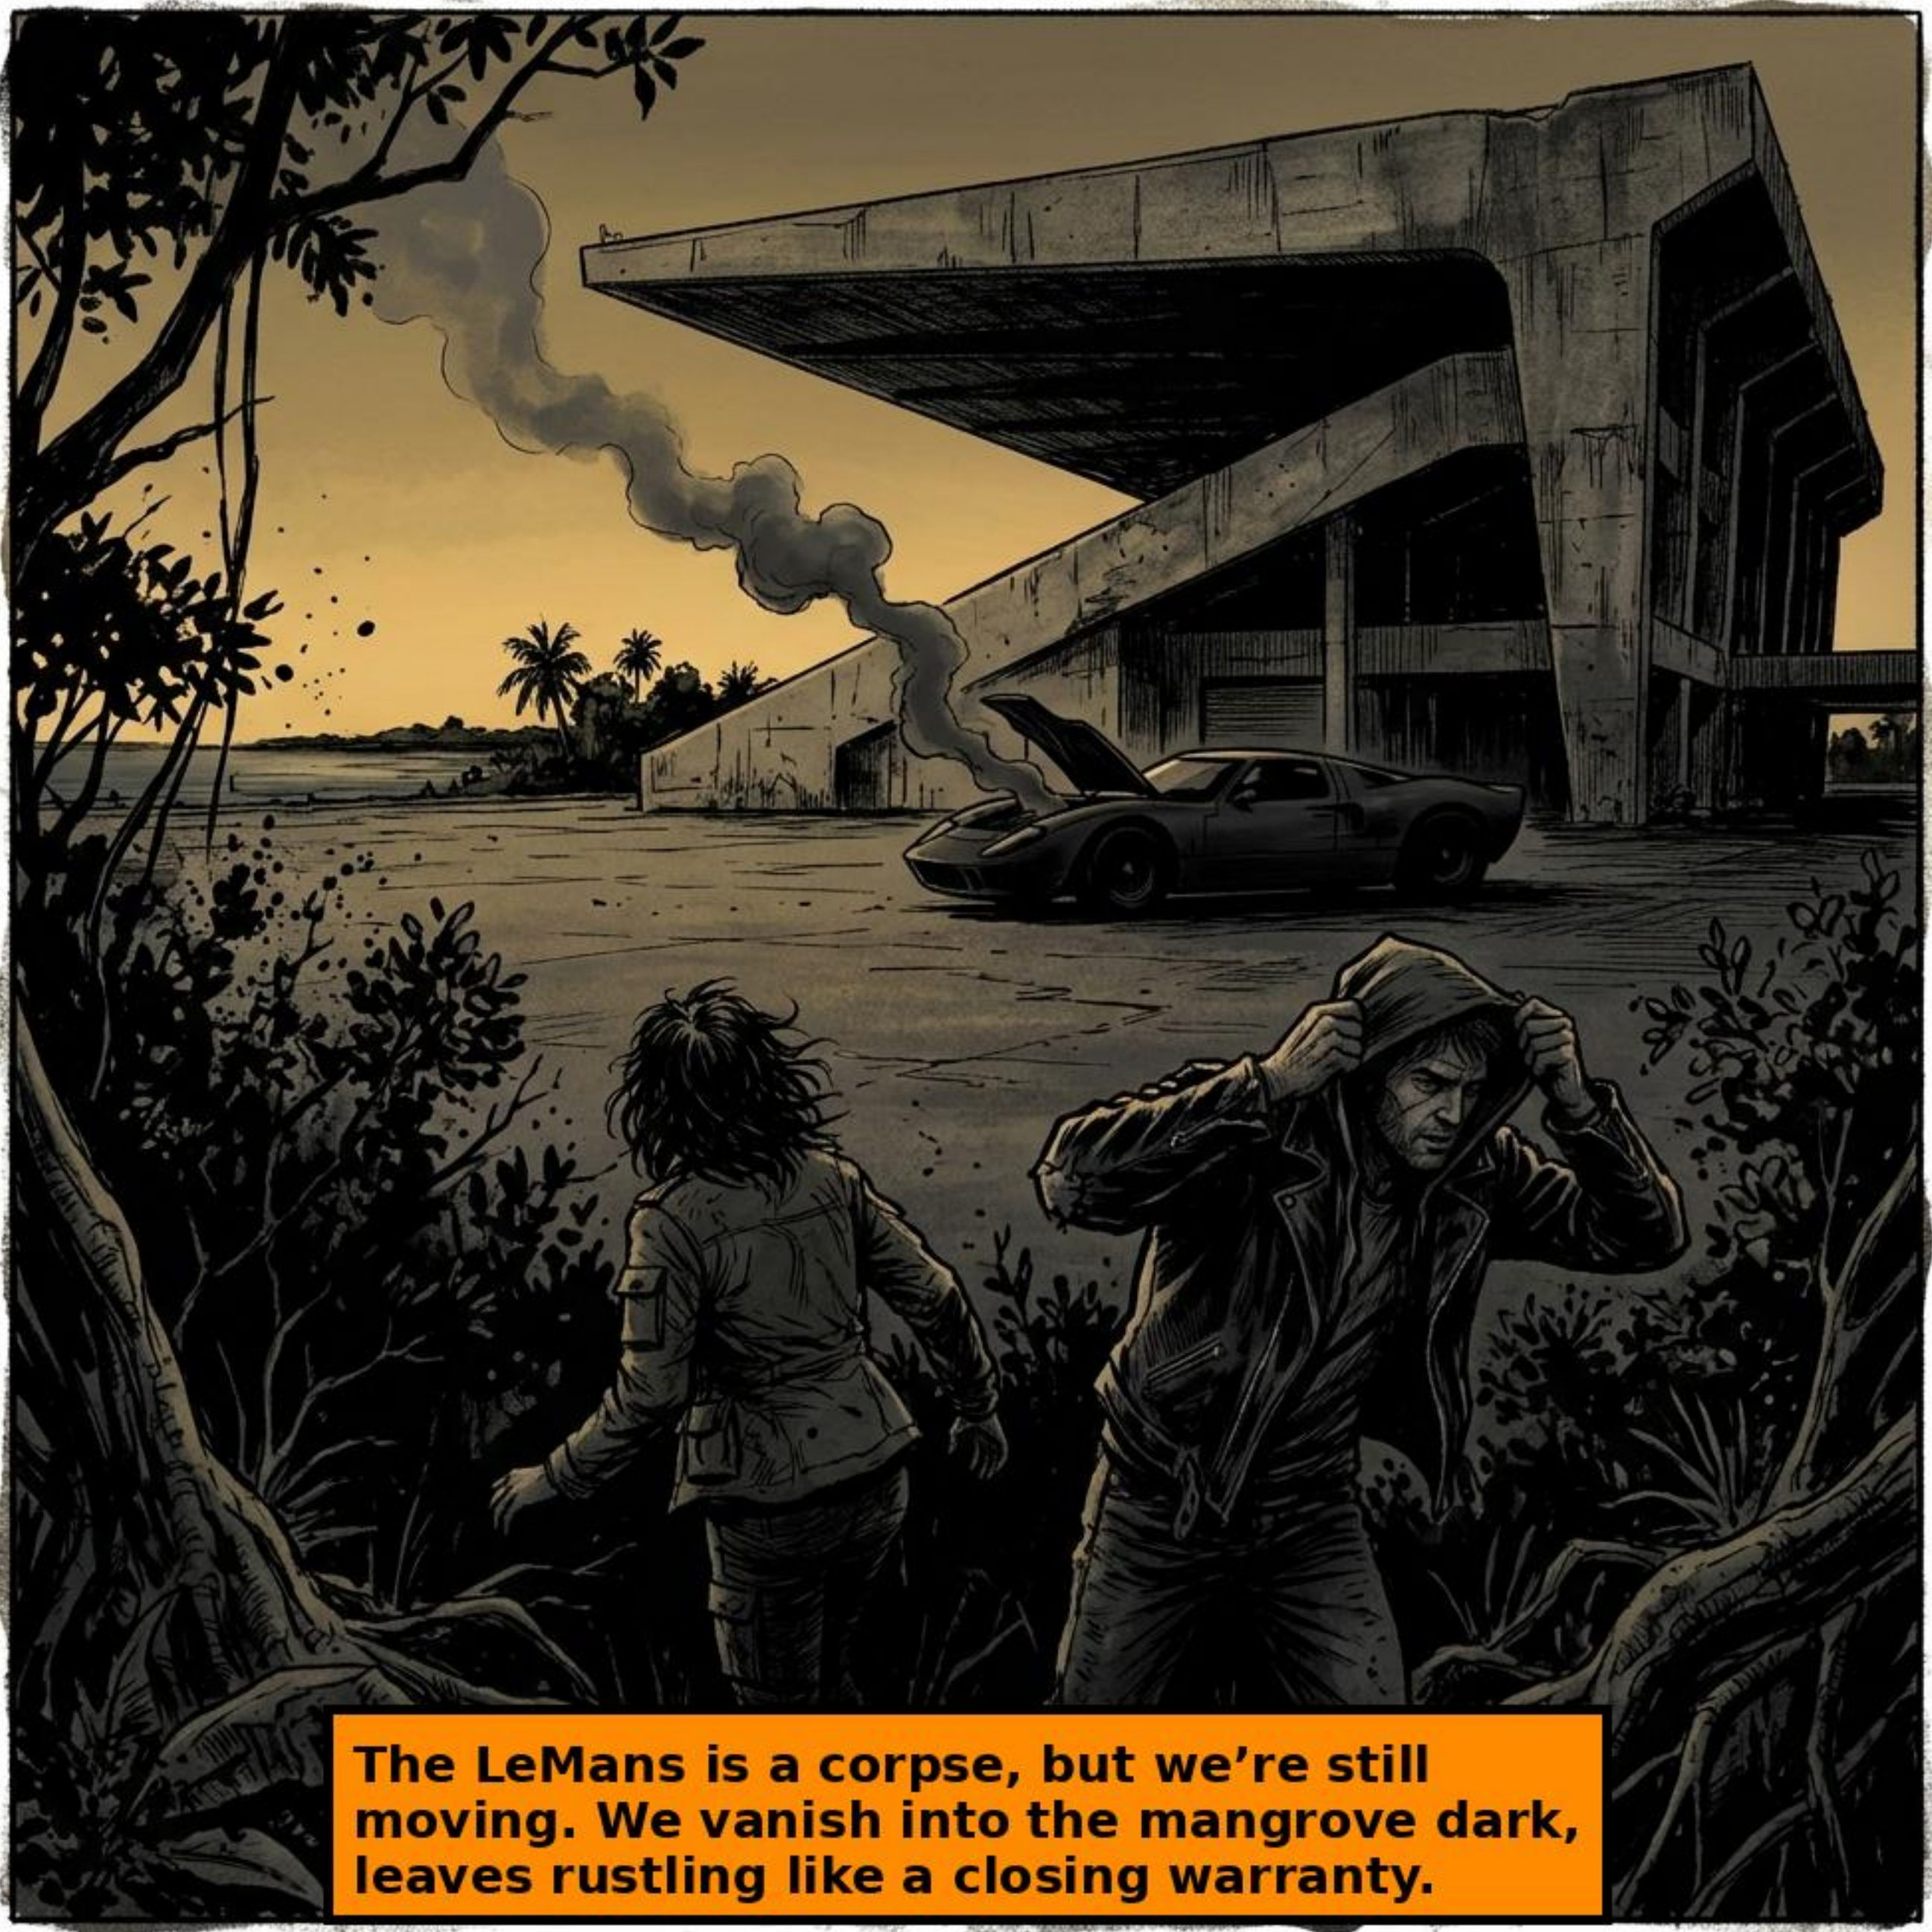

140 decibels of industrial screeching. The concrete canopy vibrates. A mechanical scream amplified a thousand times.

The Vanguard drivers are blinded by the sonic feedback, swerving, tires screaming on the slick concrete.

The LeMans is a corpse, but we're still moving. We vanish into the mangrove dark, leaves rustling like a closing warrant.